Studying abroad in London changed my life. Point, blank, period. I experienced theatre like I've never experienced it before. I literally saw Beyoncé's Renaissance World Tour across the pond for less than $200. I also drank more wine than humanly possible, yeah... not proud of that one...

This photo was taken the first full day we had in London and there is nothing more empowering than living the tourist fantasy and having a full photoshoot on the London Bridge for all the local Brits to gawk at. We even went on Instagram live ON THE BRIDGE. Like what? You literally can't get more American-college-students if you TRIED.

At first glance, you might assume that this photo was taken with an iPhone, but no no, you would be incorrect. This gorgeous photo of high fashion models was taken with a vintage camera provided by THE Jillian Mitchell (far right). And yes, we did use this camera every single day, no fail. I mean, we're gen z, give us anything vintage and we go FERAL.

It's hard not to get emotional as I'm going through these photos, because when will we ever get to be 21 in a foreign country again? Odds are, probably never. It's moments like these that will live in my head forever, completely rent free, giving me the most euphoric feeling in the world, and I have a little 'ole vintage camera to thank. Despite the inevitable truth of growing up and moving away, no matter where the 8 of us go after school, we will always share that cool afternoon on the London Bridge. And that's enough to send the toothiest smile across my face.
